|                   | Contributions to the History of Concepts is the international peer-reviewed journal of the History of Concepts Group (formerly HPSCG). It is hosted by the Bielefeld University and published by Berghahn Journals. The journal publishes theoretical and methodological articles as well as empirical studies on the history of concepts from various disciplines, such as history, linguistics, or political science. The journal has no regional focus and is published in English. The journal follows a double-blind peer review process soliciting two reviews per article. The average amount of articles published per year is 11 and the issues also include book reviews. It is internationally well-known with a long-standing tradition and is rooted within a well-established research community which provides a stable international readership.                                                                                                                                                                                       |  |  |  |  |
|                   | S:I.M.O.N. is the open-access peer-reviewed e-journal of the Vienna Wiesenthal Institute for Holocaust Studies (VWI). S:I.M.O.N. aims at both a transnational and comparative history of the Holocaust and Jewish studies in Central and Eastern Europe within the broader contexts of European history. Contributions in S:I.M.O.N. are published in English or German. In average 15 to 20 articles are published in S:I.M.O.N. per year. In addition to the research articles, S:I.M.O.N. also publishes readers, essays and reviews. In recent years, S:I.M.O.N. has developed into a central publication forum for Holocaust researchers in Central and Eastern Europe. The open accessibility of the texts, professional editing and academic supervision by VWI staff and the editorial board ensure the high quality of the contributions. At the same time, both younger researchers and established scholars find a publication opportunity here that, thanks to the networks and reputation of the VWI, creates a wide outreach and impact. |  |  |  |  |
